Following my Oral Statement on the Access to Justice Review on Tuesday 13 September, you asked a question about legal advice and representation for children and young people in issues outside of family law. I undertook to check the position and to write to you.

The position in respect of legal advice and assistance is that this is available in respect of any point of Northern Ireland law subject to the applicant meeting two statutory tests, namely that the applicant:

- has met the financial eligibility test for legal aid; and
- has shown reasonable grounds for taking, defending, or being a party to proceedings.

Legal advice and assistance can be made available to children and young people for issues outside of family law including education and mental health tribunals.

The position in respect of legal representation is different in that cases before the Special Educational Needs & Disability Tribunal do not qualify for legal representation. If there are exceptional circumstances, an application may be made to the Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission for exceptional grant funding. The final report of the Access to Justice Review, which I published on 13 September, recommended a change in respect of this Tribunal, and I will be considering this in the light of representations I receive in response to the current consultation on the Review.

In respect of proceedings before the Mental Health Review Tribunal, legal aid for representation is automatically available. A financial eligibility test is not applied following my decision to waive this requirement in December 2010. I attach a copy of the Authorisation which made this change for your information. Should you require any further information, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Yours
David
